To any professional man to purchase goods of inferior houses and press goods of inferior houses and press them upon innocent customers because he can do so. In the long run he will find he has sown seed in poor ground and his harvest will be small. This is an age when patients want the best and they are going to have it. When they have their eyes fitted they will inquire who has had the longest experience in fitting eyes, who has the best room for eye examinations, who does their own grinding, and the answer will come to them from all the people of this city. Dunbar's Preserved Figs.

We have just received a fresh shipment of Dunbar's Preserved Figs in ment of Dunbar's Preserved Figs i was witnesed by a unusually hearty. and the cheering was unusually hearty. The royal standard and the union jack of old England tugged and tore in the brisk wind from the spires of the houses of parliament this morning, a silent token of the fact that the day designated for the reassembling of parliament bud arrived. The usual crowds began to assemble outside the gates of Westminster palace yard at an early hour and by noon several thousand people were massed about the outer entrances to the legislative chamber. The crowds which lined the route from Buckingham palace to Westminster, to view the royal procession, also were unusually large. Guardsmen, assisted by hundreds of police, kept the spectators back, but they had little to do.

Much Ceremony.

In view of the stirring national issues with which the speech from the throne was bound to deal the picturesque ceremony in the bosse of loyle was never mony in the house of lords was never attended with more clamor and splendor. The exemiony was in strict accordance with precedent. The procession to the chamber was of the same character as on similar occasions in the past, and within was seen the same state pageantry historic dresses, and revival of ancient forms. Will Be Momentous Session-The present session of parliament is expected to be one of the most momentous in the modern history of the United Kingdom, This expectation ap-pears certain of realization if the present program of the government coalition is carried out, and that this will be d or at any rate will be attempted, there is full reason to believe.

The manner in which the anti-veto bill will be dealt with is already a subject of keen discussion. Before the election it was declared by the highest government authorities that the bill must be passed letter perfect, without the slight by state ranger Charles Moore and est amendment. That declaration served taken to the police station where he is as good campaign material, but whether it will be strictly adhered to is doubtful. It is regarded as more than likely that a spirit of concession and compromise will prevail. But even if a compromise on the antiveto bill is promptive effected the session is bound to be epoch making in the history of Westminster. It will almost certainly mark the passing away of purely hereditary privilege in British lawmaking, the reconstitution of the upper chamber either in actual composition or in essential functions, and the rendjustment of relations between the two houses.
